

The power of community

Nearly enough,
sort of enough,
almost enough ...

In Hana's street there is not enough. Until Hana decides to do something about it. Although Hana's attempts to help are in the beginning successful, when winter comes, then hardship, she is unable to meet everyone's needs.

At the point where she despairs, her family and the neighbours she has helped step in and offer to give her a hand. By pulling together they build a resilient community in which everyone has enough.

Enough is a story about community, kindness and the power of helping hands. This book is also a way for younger children to reflect on and make sense of what happened during the Covid 19 pandemic, through story.

Enough is a story Sarah Johnson had been wanting to write for many years.

The event of Covid-19, along with a successful application for a grant through Copyright Licensing New Zealand's Special Round of Contestable Funds, meant the story could finally happen and would be relevant in today's society.

Both Sarah Johnson and Deborah Hinde gratefully acknowledge the support from CLNZ. Because of that support, one dollar from each book sold is donated to Feed the Kids, Whaingaroa

Enough and the New Zealand curriculum

Enough is a valuable text for teachers and families to share and discuss with younger children what it means to have 'enough' and what they and others can do to look after each other during challenging times.

The story aligns with the key competencies in the New Zealand Curriculum (relating to others, and participating and contributing); and to the social sciences curriculum levels 1 and 2, in particular with respect to understanding:

- how belonging to groups is important for people
- that people have different roles and responsibilities as part of their participation in groups
- that people have social, cultural, and economic roles, rights, and responsibilities
- how people make choices to meet their needs and wants
- how time and change affect people's lives
- how people make significant contributions to New Zealand's society.

Enough is also an uplifting story, with beautiful pictures that reflect the communities where many New Zealanders live, allowing children to see themselves and their place on the page.
